The aim of this study was to analyze the results of arthroscopic treatment of functional scapulohumeral instability in adults. From January 1997 to July 2001, 14 shoulders were operated on according to the arthroscopic technique. Mean age was 33 years (range: 18 to 43). Preoperative evaluation consisted of: arthrography, osteosynthesis if necessary, limited test of the active painfree range of motion, electrodiagnosis. The UCLA score was used to evaluate the shoulder function. The Constant score and the Visual Analogue Scale were used to evaluate the pain. There was a significant clinical improvement with better functional results of the UCLA score and the visual analogue scale. Preoperative arthrography showed minor changes or no changes and Hill-Sachs lesion was diagnosed in 5 cases. The treatment of this entity can be performed arthroscopically with an 8 to 12 months follow up, but functional results are good.Tana - The following CPs are "Banned from Trade: US" and "Banned from
